

President Barack Obama says the weekend ouster of Honduran leader Manuel Zelaya was a "not legal" coup and that he remains the country's president.

Yep, that quote is from our Democrat "Not Ready for Primetime" President. You really can't make this shit up. Reality has a way of slapping idealistic morons up side the head, so Obambi should have quite a headache by now.

Hours after the sitting president was deposed by a military-led coup, a new president of Honduras was sworn in Sunday.

But the former president was not ready to give up his powers.

The political developments that swept Honduras over the past weeks and led up to Sunday's coup had the makings of a crisis, but the situation in the Central American nation of 8 million people was calm.

Roberto Micheletti was sworn in as provisional president to the applause of members of Congress, who chanted, "Honduras! Honduras!" Outside the building, supporters of ousted

Live from Washington DC, It's Saturday Night Live!

Written by Barthélemy Barbancourt
Monday, 29 June 2009 15:16 -

---

President Jose Manuel Zelaya protested, but their numbers were limited, and the streets remained mostly peaceful. Micheletti told CNN en Español Sunday evening that he has imposed an "indefinite" curfew.

Micheletti, the head of Congress, became president after lawmakers voted by a show of hands to strip Zelaya of his powers, with a resolution stating that Zelaya "provoked confrontations and divisions," within the country. A letter of resignation purported to be from Zelaya was read to members before the vote.□

And in Washington, President Obama said in a statement that he was "deeply concerned" by the news.

Deeply concerned?? I'd love to ask the Iranian Freedom fighters how they feel about Obama and his "concern" but I Wanna Jihad is rounding them up and killing them as quickly as possible.

Obama will never be ready to handle this job and now people are dying due to his incompetence. The Obama death toll will far surpass anything that occurred under GW Bush.