

What about the economy & jobs?

Written by The Admiral
Sunday, 07 March 2010 06:59 -

On the campaign trail Obama said he would bring 2 million new jobs to America. Since Obama's policies took effect and this became his economy (from the stimulus bill forward), we have lost 4 million jobs. Now he only has to create the conditions for 6 million jobs within the next 2 and a half years. Good luck. Oh wait! I forgot about those 35 or 40 million jobs he "saved or created," or is it more than that? Never mind about the unemployment rate or the record numbers that are unemployed (15 million plus), you gotta look at all those "saved and created" jobs, that's really what counts. Just ask Barack, he'll tell you!

Most people have been focused on the economy and job creation over the past year while Obama has been using that as cover to trample the constitution and socialize as much of the country as possible with no interest in the economy or jobs, just expanding big government. Extending unemployment benefits with the stroke of a pen, is hardly focusing on jobs. Sorry, that doesn't count.

What was it? A couple of short weeks ago with Scott Brown's election all of a sudden the usual suspects (Obama, Reid & Pelosi) decided that the economy and jobs really were the most important issues the country faced. How long did that last? 2, maybe 3 days, then its right back to ramming socialized medicine down our throats, and the economy has been put on the back burner. All I can say is, you get what you vote for.